PRESERVATION OF WILDLIFE

AND ITS HABITAT:

just one aspect of Stewardship

National Survival Institute

"We don't inherit the earth from our grandparent's; we borrow it from our children."

That quote applies not just to land and minerals but to everything that lives on the earth, whether plant or animal, bird or insect.

There has been human life on this planet for millions of years -- human life that has shared the earth and not tried to dominate it. It is only in the 20th Century that science and technology have offered the temptations of power -- and we have snatched them without thought or hestitation. But our needs and desires are no more important than those of any other living creature, and we have no right to impose the effects of our way of life on others.

However, we are destroying wildlife, and this deprives native people of their traditional way of life and will leave an impoverished world for our children.

Do you want your grandchildren to hear the cry of a loon on a northern lake?

Can you imagine what it would be like if you had never tasted fish?

Why do we need wildlife?

Human beings are not independent. The world consists of a series of eco-systems -- patterns of climate, habitat, animal and vegetable life that malfunction if one of their component parts is destroyed or weakened. Their inter-relationships are so numerous that even now they are not fully understood. Human beings are part of an ecosystem, and human life can be affected by damage done to any part of the natural environment.

Wildlife -- provides food and drugs.

Waterfowl and fish are widely used for food, and even the domestic cow was wild once. More than 40% of the prescriptions issued in the USA each year contains drug of natural origin -- plants, microbes or animals. There are many thousands of species whose potential food or medicinal value has not yet been investigated. However, it is estimated that between half a million and a million species will have been made extinct by the end of the century. This reduction in genetic variety reduces the chances of survival of the human race.

-- is important for research.

Armadillos are invaluable for medical research because they are the only animal other than human beings known to contact leprosy. The recent discovery that polar bear hairs are exceptionally efficient heat absorbers may lead to better cold weather clothing and solar energy collectors. The whale's high intelligence could throw light on the workings of the human brain.

-- provides ready-made environmental controls.

Rattlesnakes eat rodents; the nearly extinct peregrine falcon used to control pigeon populations in city centres; wolves eat weak animals and so help ensure there is enough food for the rest of the herd. Shrews are now being imported into Newfoundland to help control spruce sawfly.

(cont. on page 4)

PRESERVATION OF WILDLIFE AND ITS HABITAT:

-- acts as a barometer for the state of the environment.

When the effects of pollution start to show in predatory birds or animals -- the top of the food chain -- human beings know that they too are in danger.

-- provides relaxation and enjoyment.

There are tens of thousands of bird and animal watchers, nature photographers and hunters across the country. Canadians spend an estimated $190 million each year on wildfowl related activities alone.

-- is an educational tool.

Many young children relate to wildlife, which can be used to teach them about the environment and even lead them to explore social relationships and communication among human beings.

What are the threats to wildlife?

Destruction of habitat.

Suburbs, roads, airports and shopping malls are built over nesting and feeding areas; marsh land is "reclaimed" because it is felt to be unproductive: forests are clear-stripped; fish breeding grounds are silted up with eroded soil and the debris from construction projects.

One of the last areas where wild-life habitat is relatively undisturbed is the Artic. But now oil and mineral wealth are threatening even this "last frontier." The Dempster Highway, which opened in 1978, bisects the range of the Porcupine caribou herd, one of the last great herds in the world. It is not yet known what effect this restriction on movement will have on the herd, but hunters have been shooting the animals from their cars. Gravel for roads is dug from the denning areas of fox, wolves and bears. Low-flying aircraft frighten herds of caribou; animals break their legs in the stampede and mothers are separated from their young. Polar bears investigate construction camps and are shot. Finally --- the greatest danger --- no one knows whether an oil spill in Artic waters could be contained. The Arctic food chains are simple, relying heavily on a group of shrimp-like creatures. An oil spill which killed these creatures would have devastating effects on all Artic animals and thus on the native people who rely on them for food.

Over-exploitation by hunting and fishing.

The George River caribou herd, said to be the largest free-ranging herd in the world, may be endangered because of excessive hunting in Northern Québec.

Overfishing has two consequences -- direct reduction of the species being fished, and accidental removal of smaller species that form the basis of the marine food chain. This "incidental take" is estimated to destroy 7 million tonnes of fish each year.

Introduction of alien species.

The Garrison Diversion project designed to irrigate land in North Dakota, will transfer fish, diseases and parasites native to the Missouri River watershed to the Hudson Bay system, threatening the existence of commercial fisheries in Lake Winnipeg and Lake Manitoba.

Poisoning

Pesticides and herbicides harm birds and animals. The peregrine falcon, the fastest creature in the world, with a diving speed of 250 kilometers an hour, was brought to the brink of extinction by pesticides.

PRESERVATION OF WILDLIFE AND ITS HABITAT:

Acid rain is killing fish in the lakes and rivers of Eastern Canada. In Ontario alone some 200 lakes are already "dead" and 48,000 may be lost by the turn of the century.

Between 1962 and 1970 Dryden Chemicals Ltd. dumped nearly 10,000 kilograms (20,000 lbs) of mercury into the English-Wabigoon River system in North-western Ontario, making its fish -- the staple diet of the Indian villages of White Dog and Grassy Narrows -- unsafe to eat.

In 1979 the Federal Government made a special regulation allowing Amax of Canada to dump molybdenum mine tailings into Alice Arm, an inlet of the Pacific in Northern British Columbia. One hundred million metric tons will be dumped over a 26 year period. The tailings will be concentrations 16,000 times higher than allowed by the Fisheries Act, and will contain arsenic, lead, mercury, cadmium. copper, zinc. iron and Radium 226. Scientific reports and eveidence from twother sites where tailings have been dumped into the sea -- in lower concentrations -- indicate very strongly that marine life will be affected and will pose a danger to human life. Alice Arm is the traditional fishing ground of the Nishga Indians, and provides their main source of food.

What hope is there?

An example to follow:

Seven major Canadian churches have opposed the Alice Arm dumping, together with numerous organizations including the B.C. Medical Organization, the B.C. Federation of Labour and miners belonging to the United Steelworkers of America. The Anglican Church bought Amax shares and put forward a resolution at the 1981 shareholders' meeting asking for a moratorium on the dumping until a public hearing was held.

Other gleams of hope for wildlife:

* The Mackenzie Valley Pipeline Inquiry, headed by Justice Thomas Berger, proposed the establishment of bird and whale sanctuaries in the Mackenzie Delta and a National Wilderness Park to protect the wildlife of the Nothern Yukon.
* Peregrine falcons and whooping cranes, once nearly extinct, now seem more likely to survive. Peregrine falcons are being bred at centres in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Québec and released in the wild. Whooping crane eggs from Wood Buffalo National Park in the Northwest Territories are being hatched by sandhill cranes on a reserve in Idaho.
* An organization called Ducks Unlimited has undertaken more than 1600 projects across Canada, creating almost 2.6 million acres of good waterfowl habitat.

What can I do to help?

Walk along a nature trail or go to a Natural Science museum and learn how an ecosystem works.

Join a wildlife association

Write to your elected representative about the need to preserve wildlife.

Support the preservation of wildlife habitat in your area.

Write to the presidents of companies that dump toxic wates in oceans or rivers. Boycott their products.

RAPPORT SPÉCIAL

SPECIAL REPORT

par Rosaire Corbin, directeur général -
A.C.Q.

"ON A BESOIN DE VOUS; C'EST POUR VOUS!"

Pour une Association à qui on confie le mandat de représenter ses membres, de promouvoir et défendre leurs intérêts, il est impensable qu' elle remplisse adéquatement ce rôle si elle ne dispose pas des données de base qui caractérisent l'ensemble de son membership.

Dans le jargon moderne, on appelle cela des statistiques. Même si on répète que "les chiffres ne veulent rien dire ou encore qu'on peut faire dire ce qu'on veut aux statistiques", il n'en reste pas moins que le language des chiffres est très éloquent.

Qui que nous soyons, nous sommes toujours à la recherche des chiffres, la saine gestion d'un camp ou d'une Association en dépend.

Les membres du Conseil d'administration ou des Comités ont sans cesse besoin d'un portrait fidèle de ses membres pour mieux assumer leurs fonctions. La qualité et l'impact de leurs interventions sont étroitement liés à la connaissance qu'ils ont du milieu qu'ils représentent.

Quoi de plus difficile d'entamer une discussion ou une négociation lorsqu'aux premières questions posées: "qui représentez-vous?, combien d'enfants accueillez-vous dans vos camps? combien de personnes engagez-vous? il faut faire précéder les réponses des mots "à peu près" la solidité de l'argumentation en est automatiquement affaiblie.

On ne saurait trop insister sur la nécessité de répondre aux différents questionnaires qui vous sont envoyés par votre Association. Négliger de le faire aux dates prévues paralysent l'action de vos représentants et est préjudiciable aux autres membres.

Si on est fier de notre entreprise, si on est fier de notre action auprès des personnes qui fréquentent nos camps, on se doit de répandre ces bonnes nouvelles. Le public doit le savoir, les institutions gouvernementales ou autres doivent le savoir-, car nous contribuons par nos activités au développement des personnes, au développement social et au développement économique. Cela nous le savons, mais pour le faire connaître globalement aux autres, il faut des données, il faut des statistiques.

Innombrables sont ceux qui s'adressent aux Associations pour connaître ou mieux connaître le domaine des camps. Tantôt ce sont des institutions de recherche, tels les universités et les collèges, tantôt ce sont les institutions gouvernementales-, tantôt ce sont les fédérations de sport ou de loisir, tantôt ce sont d'éventuels membres commerciaux.

Vos représentants ou vos employés se trouvent souvent dans des situations embêtantes car ils ne peuvent avec fermeté et certitude établir clairement le portrait exact des camps.

Comme suite aux renseignements recueillis l'an dernier voici quelques données statistiques. Elles ont la valeur objective de savants calculs d'extrapolation effectués afin de remédier aux 45% des non-répondants.

Il est à espérer une réponse de la totalité des camps afin de donner plus de crédibilité à nos statistiques.

Il n'en tient qu'à vous; car c'est pour vous!!!
